Guest Speaker:

Carolyn Brokowski serves as the vice-chair of APSA's Policy Committee. While she has long-term interests in basic science and clinical medicine, increasingly she has focused on the indisputable importance, urgency, and weight of law, policy, and economics in shaping the successes and failures therein. This is especially evident in today's era of the Affordable Care Act implementation, congressional sequestrations, corporate medicine, and the stagnation of the federal funding of biomedical research. Nevertheless, she aspires to pursue a career in academic medicine, while engaging in advocacy at the federal level to promote the infrastructural well-being of medical science, health policy, and law. Carolyn is a Yale College graduate, an MSc Candidate, at Columbia University's Department of Bioethics (Medical Ethics), and an MD/JD Candidate, Columbia University. She is also an alumna of the Sherwin B. Nuland Summer Institute in Bioethics.

The title of Carolyn's presentation is:
Medicine and Law
