"One can never pay in gratitude; one can only pay 'in kind' somewhere else in life." --Anne Morrow Lindbergh (1906-2001)

Nancy Alderman, Environment and Human health, Inc., added this:

Big Tobacco brought us flame retardants in all our consumer products --
Big Tobacco taught other polluting corporations how to get around government regulations - Big Tobacco was the brains behind teaching corporations how to put "doubt" in consumers minds so the harmful products could continue to be on the market. Look at e-cigarettes, synthetic turf, outdoor wood furnaces, and the list could go on and on.

“In the first part of this review, I discussed principles and codes of ethics concerning human experimentation, including the Nuremberg Code and the Declaration of Helsinki. But principles and codes are not the same as laws and regulations, even though they might inspire them. The first US statute dealing with the ethics of medical research on human subjects was enacted in 1962, as a reaction to the thalidomide tragedy of the late 1950s, in which pregnant women given thalidomide to alleviate morning sickness gave birth to infants with deformed or missing limbs.…"
