I wanted him to be able to spend his time in the way that he wanted to. I said, “Don’t you think it will make your death more painful?” (having a child at that time he was dying) He said, “Wouldn’t it be great if it did?” Then — he says this in the book, too — where he’s like, “We agreed that life is not about avoiding suffering.” It’s about creating meaning.

“EPA’s Fall in Flint, an aberration or part of a pattern?”, Joe Davidson, The Washington Post, January 28, 2016

“Disability Benefits Dogged by Arduous, Outdated Paperwork, Auditor General Finds; Just 7% of terminally ill people applying for CPP disability payments got a decision on within the 48-hour guideline. Just over half of those with chronic conditions had their cases decided on within the established 30-day window.”

“Veterans' DSM-5 PTSD Symptom Patterns by Trauma Type,” Jessica Graham et al…, Military Psychology, Future Publication.
“Results of this preliminary study substantiate the theory that PTSD may not be an all-encompassing and cohesive disorder, but rather a syndrome that has many subtypes based on symptom expression that are conceptually related to the precipitating traumatic event within the veteran population.”

YaleGlobal Online, a publication of Yale’s MacMillan Center, has an article titled Wanted: “European Grand Strategy for War Against the Islamic State,” by Joergen Oerstroem Moeller. Here’s a quote: “The Islamic State is transforming Europe, with rising xenophobia and support for far right parties that propose mean-spirited and isolating policies. With cultural identity under attack from both outside and in, Europe confronts an existential crisis.”
